-The order of the President approving the sentence of the Military Commission in Texas ust promulgated is the first approval by the President of action of military courts under the reconstruction acts; President Johnson took no action upon such proceedings, but when presented for his approval held them under advisement or returned the papers to the War Department without comment.

—A Washington telegram of the 16th instant says: "The Treasury Department has received official intelligence of a recent decision of Ohief Justice Chase, in the United States Circuit Court in South Carolina, in a case where the government sued a United States Marshal and his sureties on bond. The marshal was in office prior to and at the comncement of the war, and he took part in the war, esponsing the cause of the Confederates. The suit was commenced against the marshal six years after he vacated his office. The statute of limitations provides that such actions shall be brought within six years. The court holds that the statute runs against the government notwithstanding the rebellion, and judgment is rendered for defendant This decision has surprised officials here who heretofore regarded it as settled that the statute of imitations did not in any instance run against the government, and such has been the tendency of adjudications in Ohio in suits against receivers of public monies. The Secretary of the Treasury will direct the above named case to be taken to the United States Supreme Court to test Judge Chase's judg-

-The following news and gossip is from the New York Correspondence (June 15) of the Philadelphia Ledger: "Parties whose information concerning filibuster movements here has heretofore proved uniformly correct, in orm me that about two hundred picked men will leave this city to-morrow, and take passage for the ever-faithful Isle in a chipper bark, now in waiting for them in an out-of-the-way place on Long Island. The officer in command is said to have been formerly on the staff of the late Brigadier-General Meagher. As usual, they don't know anything about it at the United States Marshal's office. Our late Minister to France, General Dix, came passenger in the Cimbris, which arrived at this port this afternoon. The General is in excellent health. He was very anxious on landing to see the latest telegrams from Paris, the state of public feeling there when he left being such as to excite the liveliest apprehension of political trouble. The General expresses himself convinced that the Empire and the Emperor are too strong for the success of any revolutionary movement that may be undertaken at present. The Trinity Church litigation will come up again for argument on Thursday. Owing to the vast interest, spiritual and temporal, involved, the case is exciting very general attention. In the event of the appointment of the receivership, at the instance of Mr. Groesbeck, the innumerable heirs of Anneke Jans will, no doubt, improve the occasion to renew their long outstanding claims against the venerable corporation." -A correspondent of the Richmond Dispatch gives the particulars of the lynching on Saturday last, at Lexington, Va., of the negro Edwards, who had confessed having ravished and afterwards murdered a respectable young 1 ady. The correspondent says: "At 1 o clock A. M. the jailor-Mr. Perry-was awakened by three men having another tied, whom they pretended to wish to commit to jail. Upon asking for their warrant they replied that the prisoner was a desperate horse-thief whom they had just arrested; that they wished to commit him for safekeeping, and that they would produce the proper papers in the morning. Thus appealed to, the worthy jailor-by the way, one of the most faithful officers in the Commonwealth-opened his doors to re-

THE DAILY NEWS. through the usual search of the prisoner's ing member of the Philadelphia Convention that anything was wrong until he had admitted the party to the passage along which ranged the cells. They then seized Mr. Perry, presented cocked pistols, and demanded the key to the cell of the negro. He had no recourse but to comply with their demand, especially as he was not within call of help, and by this time the jail was full of armed men. Having thus secured the victim, they marched quietly off with him-so quietly, indeed, that none of our citizens were aroused-and nothing more is definitely known save that the body was found this morning, near Lyle's mill, hanging to a tree and pierced by three bulletholes. It is supposed that about seventy-five men were engaged in the affair, and there is pretty strong proof that many of them (if not the majority of them) were from the adjoining Counties of Augusta and Bath.

CHARLESTON.

SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 19, 1869.

The Friends of the Workingman.

The Irish Convention which meets at Chicago will, according to the telegrams, declare in favor of a protective tariff, universal suffrage and war with England. The last planks in the platform are not difficult to understand; but why does a convention which represents the American Irishman, advocate a principle which, to the workingman, is a never-ending oppression and loss? The convention, it is presumed, represents the Irish Radicals, if there are enough of them in the country to make up a respectable delegation; but, whether Radical or Democratic, there is no rational excuse for atmakes New England and Pennsylvania rich, but taxes every article of food, and makes dear every stitch of clothing that the workingman may wear.

At the same time, the Irishmen of the South should not allow themselves to be persuaded by the soft words of Senator Sprague, that even that eminent New England manufacturer is the friend of the bone and sinew of the land. It is his desire, apparently, to redistribute the currency of the country, so that the States of the South $5000 TO LOAN may have enough capital to enable them to farm high and produce large crops. This is well enough, and Senator Sprague is doubtless sincere when he says that the Carolinas and Georgia and the Mississippi States want more banking espital. But the drift of the argument is to encourage the production of cotton and reduce the wages of labor. Cotton is the thread upon which hangs the life of New England; a thread which, it is feared, new habits and manners may cut in twain. Senator Sprague wants cotton for his mills, and New England. though it can produce four thousand praying parsons and a Peace Festival with one hundred real anvils, cannot produce the fleecy Southern staple. This must come from the South, and hence the interest which Senator Sprague takes in its general cultivation. Again, Senator Sprague desires to reduce the cost of manufacturing the staple by decreasing the rate of wages. Skilled Europe by way of the Mississippi River and labor commands a high price, too high a price to be agreeable to the man who pays the bills, and the New England Senator is anxious, by hook or by crook, to reduce the price of a fair day's work. This would impreve the position of the mill-owner; but it would take money out of the pocket of

> for the support of themselves and their families. One thing more. Senator Sprague, although he denounces with characteristic vigor the frauds and corruption of the Radical party, the iniquity in high places, and the political demoralization of the whole country, clings tenaciously to Protection. In all his speeches he warns the people against Free Trade, and advocates a policy which has already strangled American commerce and piled mountain high the bur dens under which the workingman groans. High tariffs injure the working classes in every direction. They make the laboring man pay more dearly for his clothing, for his tools, for the necessaries of life. The cry of the workingmen should always be, FREE TRADE AND LOW TAXATION. This is the whole platform; and necessary to it are economy in the administration of public affairs, the imposing of equal burdons upon all classes, and a return to specie payments. Offree trade Senator Sprague is the deadly enemy, and we say, therefore, that while he holds that dectrine he cannot be the friend of the workingman. Had he gone before the people with free trade principles on his lips and in his heart, he could have carried with him the whole of the white working men of the United States. As it is, he only proves that he is our enemy rather than our friend.

We think that Senator Sprague is as honest as he is earnest; but his principles are not our principles and his ways not our ways. As long as he is a protectionist he is a fee of the South; and that he has very sensibly bought real estate in Columbia and will spend money there, is no reason why our people should bow down and worship.

The Late Henry J. Raymond.

Mr. Henry J. Raymond, the editor of the New York Times left the office of that journal apparently in good health at midnight on Thursday, and died at five o'clock yesterday morning. Mr. Raymond was in the prime of his intellectual vigor, being only forty-nine years old. A public life full of stratagem and surprise has been closed by a sudden and unexpected death.

The career of Mr. Raymond as a newspaper writer began in 1840, and in 1841 he became managing editor of the New York Tribune. Subsequently he became associate editor with General James Watson Webb, of the New York Courier and Enquirer. This connection ended somewhat abruptly, and Mr. Raymond, in 1851, established the New York Times, of which paper he was, until his death, the principal

The public life of Mr. Raymend was full of incident. In 1849 he was elected to the New York General Assembly; in 1852 he took a prominent part in the Baltimore Convention; in 1856 he was elected by the Republican party Lieutenant-Governor of New York, and in 1864 he was elected to cover the pretended prisoner. He even went Congress. Mr. Baymond was also a lead-

The Times, under the control of Mr. Raymond, was soon an assured success. Horace Greeley said, not more than two years ago, that H. J. Raymond was "the best newspaper man he had ever known." To ability was added industry and moderation of habit. Mr. Raymond was a hard worker to the last day of his life; and yet with all this ability and industry and perseverance and hard work and purity of private conduct, H J. Raymond was a pelitical failure. The reason is that he had no fixed principles; all that he aimed at was power and place, and his best friends soon learned that no confidence could be reposed in the public declarations of one who would desert his closest ally for the mere chance of preferment. This killed H. J. Raymond as a public man, the mortal blow being his desertion of the South and President Johnson, while the eloquent words with which he vindicated this people and the Executive at the Philadelphia Convention were still ringing in the ears of men.

Mr. Raymond was essentially a trimmer, and, however the man may be regretted, there will be no sorrow felt for the loss of the shuffling and time-serving politician.

THE VIRGINIANS; A TALE OF THE LAST CENTURY.

By William Makepeace Thackeray, New York: Harper Brothers. Charleston: Holmes' Book The Virginians is not as generally popular as the Newcomes or Vanity Fair, but in its picures of life in Colonial America, and in the England of Queen Anne, Wolfe, and the Noveltempting to give strength to a system which list Richardson there is a fund of pleasantry which is heightened by the jest and satire, always gentlemanly and natural, which have made the name of Thackeray one to be remember d. The Harpe have done well to bring out this "Tale of the Last Century," as the second volume of their cheap edition (of of the novels of the great satirist. It is well printed, quaintly illustrated by the author, nd costs seventy-five cents.
